

notes .

The difference between a solution of human problems in psychological as opposed to metaphysical terms may be said to lie, at least in part, in this: that a metaphysical solution implies ~~substance~~ non-physical substantiality underlying the psychical value while for a purely psychological solution all the substantial values are regarded as physical. Exclusively psychological values are thus to be regarded as essentially empty or insubstantial. 9/18/39